Introducing Premier's New Pop-Open™ Hot Air Balloon Spinners

- Easy set-up! No complicated assembly or loose parts. Simply push the top hub toward the basket and the balloon automatically locks into shape. Balloons can also be collapsed for easy storage.
- Features vibrant colors printed on heavy-duty outdoor wrinkle-free SunTex™ fabric!
- Large open intakes allow for spinning in the lightest breeze!
- Includes Premier's exclusive non-tangle rotating hub, which does not jam like metal swivels!
- Available in 19" and 22" sizes and a broad variety of themes and designs
- See pages 98-104 for more details

Petite Spinners are adorable! Their small size and low price are an easy fit for any garden and pocketbook. They come in a compact package and are easy to display. The wings are pre-glued by the factory for simple assembly and lasting durability!

Triple Spinners are the very first spinner we developed and our most popular to date. They are admired for many reasons: First and foremost, their counter-rotating wheels create a colorful stroboscopic effect that is simply dazzling to watch from many angles. In addition, they have been known to last for years, enduring all kinds of weather. Finally, they are available in many stylish themes that are loved by all.

Wind Generators are the largest wind spinning devices we manufacture and feature sturdy seamless tubular aluminum masts, stainless steel axles and durable SunTex™ fabric sails. These slow turning sails have a built-in elastic governor device that helps maintain constant speed. Based on designs by Mike Delfar of Gravity Works in Franklin, Wisconsin.

Bald Eagle:
Bald Eagles have been a prominent symbol of the United States for over two centuries, representing core American values.
Here's why and how Bald Eagles became such an important emblem:
Choice of the Bald Eagle
In 1782, following the Declaration of Independence, the Second Continental Congress tasked a committee with creating a seal for the new nation. After some deliberation and controversy, the Bald Eagle was chosen for its long life, great strength, and majestic appearance, and because it was believed as the spirit to be unique to North America.
Symbolism:
The Bald Eagle was not everyone's first choice. In 1782, following the Declaration of Independence, the bald Benjamin Franklin presented the turkey as the national bird, considering the Bald Eagle to be "a bird of bad moral character" because it would steal food from other birds.
Widespread Use
Since then, the Bald Eagle has become ubiquitous in American iconography, appearing on official documents, currency, flags, public buildings, military insignia, and postage stamps.
Interesting Facts
The Bald Eagle was not everyone's first choice. There is a well-known anecdote (possibly a myth) that Benjamin Franklin presented the turkey as the national bird, considering the Bald Eagle to be "a bird of bad moral character" because it would steal food from other birds.

American Goldfinch:
The American Goldfinch is a bright yellow bird, sometimes referred to as the Wild Canary and are difficult to miss. They are a small songbird native to North America, and members of the Finch family. They are migratory birds, breeding from mid Alberta to North Carolina and wintering from south of the Canadian U.S. border to Mexico. American Goldfinches prefer open areas such as weedy fields, meadows, and scrubby edges of woodlands. Their diet is primarily seeds of the Tumbleweed (Composite) family, small seeds of elm, birch, and other trees, weeds, and grasses.

Blue Jay:
Blue Jays are passerine birds in the Corvidae family native to eastern North America. They inhabit eastern and central United States, living in pairs and small flocks, and avoid areas of wooded habitats, and avoid areas of open fields. Blue Jays are also known for their intelligence and are able to solve problems. They are also known for their intelligence and are able to solve problems. They are also known for their intelligence and are able to solve problems.

Black-Capped Chickadee:
Black-capped Chickadees are small songbirds that are native to North America. They are members of the Paridae family, also known as the Tit family. They are easily recognized by their distinctive black cap, black throat bib, and bright white cheeks. They are common year-round near the edges of forests and in areas with willows, cottonwoods, alders, and birch trees. Black-capped Chickadees have a varied diet, consuming both insects and plant matter.

American Robin:
American Robins are migratory songbirds belonging to the True Thrush group and are known for their red breast. They were named after the European Robin due to their similar red-brown breast. American Robins are found in a wide variety of habitats, including parks, backyards, and open fields. They are known for their loud, cheerful song, which is often heard in the morning and evening. They are known to eat earthworms, grubs, and berries. They are known to eat earthworms, grubs, and berries. They are known to eat earthworms, grubs, and berries.

Northern Cardinal:
Northern Cardinals, often referred to as common cardinals, are songbirds belonging to the genus Cardinalis. They prefer habitats with dense shrubbery, including woodland edges, thickets, overgrown fields, and backyards. Cardinals feed on many species, including beetles, tree sap, grasshoppers, caterpillars, ants, fish, spiders, centipedes, and seeds. Most of their diet is vegetable matter, including seeds of sorghum, rice, and grasses, wheat grain, red buds, flowers, berries, and wild fruits.

Barn Owl:
Barn Owls are a striking and globally widespread owl species known for their distinctive heart-shaped faces and pale plumage. They are found in a wide range of open and semi-open habitats across every continent except Antarctica. They prey on open habitats for hunting. For nesting and roosting, they seek out caves, both natural and man-made. Barn Owls are primarily nocturnal hunters specializing in small mammals, especially rodents like voles, mice, and rats.

Snowy Owl:
Snowy Owls, also known as Great White Owls or Arctic Owls, are large, majestic birds of prey that live in the Arctic regions of North America, Europe, and Asia. They are recognizable by their white plumage and piercing yellow eyes. Snowy Owls have a remarkably flexible neck that allows them to rotate their heads approximately 270 degrees. This concentration for their ability to move their eyes in their sockets. They primarily feed on lemmings, and small rodents.

Eastern Screech Owl:
Eastern Screech Owls are small, common owls found throughout eastern North America. Known for their distinctive calls and exceptional camouflage, these owls are a captivating part of many woodlands and even suburban areas. Eastern Screech Owls are adaptable and inhabit a wide range of wooded areas. They are opportunistic carnivores with a diverse diet. They are cavity nesters, utilizing natural tree cavities, abandoned woodpecker holes, and even nest boxes. They can rotate their heads up to 270 degrees due to having 14 vertebrae in their necks.

Barred Owl:
Barred Owls, also known as Great White Owls or Eastern Owls, are a fascinating medium-sized owl species native to North America. They prefer dense forests, particularly moist forests, wooded swamps, and woodlands near water. Barred Owls have a diverse diet and eat small mammals but will also prey on birds, reptiles, amphibians, fish, crayfish, and various invertebrates. They primarily hunt at night, using their keen vision and hearing to detect prey. Their soft feathers allow for silent flight, enabling them to ambush prey.

Great Horned Owl:
Great Horned Owls are one of the most widespread, known for their distinctive feathered hoods (often mistaken for ears or horns) and piercing yellow eyes. They primarily hunt mammals and birds, including a wide array of animals such as rodents, rabbits, skunks, various birds (including other owls), and even reptiles, amphibians, insects, including toads, grasshoppers, and crayfish, and even urban areas.

Towering at 8' high, these large windsocks rotate with the wind and indicate direction. Sturdy fiberglass sectional supports enable these windsock installations to break down to a convenient 27" package. Please note these windsocks are for decorative purposes only and are not calibrated for civilian airport installations.

Premier's new style of weather vane is a lively combination of a directional windsock and all your favorite playful characters! Similar to our famously popular Swimming Fish, Windicators move with the direction of the wind and inflate to a 3-D shape. Put several in your yard for a roaming herd of animals or fun flock of birds and you will be the hit of the neighborhood!
